

Addison Group Provides the Right AI Talent for a Critical Field Solution

A fire protection and life safety provider needed experienced AI talent to transform its time-intensive hydrant inspection process through an AI-powered application.

Challenge

A nationwide leader in fire protection, life safety, and security services sought a more efficient way to inspect its fire hydrant systems. Their existing process was time-consuming and required employees to manually check hydrant tags in the field to confirm each system was up to code and functioning properly.

The client wanted to create an AI-powered app to automate this process and needed two AI Architects to develop the solution.

However, they struggled to source the right experts on their own and needed a partner who could provide highly qualified professionals with deep experience in AI solutions.

Solutions

Addison Group leveraged its extensive network of talent to identify the right AI Architects to build the app. The Addison Group team's deep experience delivering AI solutions meant they understood the right questions to ask to distinguish proven expertise from buzzwords on a resume.

To further validate the candidates' ability to deliver, the Addison team coordinated working interviews with the client. During these sessions, candidates spent a day onsite completing project-based work, giving the client confidence in both their technical capabilities and overall fit.

Results

With the application the AI Architects built, the client saved significant time monitoring the status of its fire hydrant systems. Instead of physically checking each hydrant, the field team is now able to quickly access information in the app, locate units, and streamline the inspection process.

The Addison Difference
